RECOMMENDED READING LIST OF DR. JOSEPH LUMBARD
[compiled 2 August, 2008]

Joseph Lumbard
Assistant Professor
Brandeis University

Joseph Lumbard, assistant professor of classical Islam, researches Islamic intellectual traditions with an emphasis on Sufism and Islamic philosophy. He is the editor of "Islam, Fundamentalism, and the Betrayal of Tradition" (World Wisdom, 2004), a collection of essays that examines the religious, political and historical factors that have led to the rise of Islamic fundamentalism. Lumbard is currently researching the development of Sufi theories of love in the early Islamic period and their influence on the Persian Sufi tradition. He completed his Ph.D. at Yale University in 2003.
http://www.brandeis.edu/departments/nejs/faculty/lumbard.html

I. Qur’an:

Perhaps the best academic study of the Qur’an in any European language. Advanced historical-linguistic analysis of the Qur’an. Can be very difficult, but well worth the effort.

Similar to Ethico-Religious Concepts.

Al-Khui revisits many critical and controversial topics connected with the collection and ultimate canonization of the text that have received little attention in contemporary Muslim scholarship. For instance, he tackles what is probably the single most controversial subject in Qur’anic studies: the question of possible alterations to the Qur’an as maintained by some succeeding generations of compilers of the Qur’an. Al-Khui stresses the importance of understanding the historical setting in which the Qur’an was revealed. His arguments illuminate some of the substantial yet little-understood and appreciated issues that have been debated between the two principal segments of the Muslim community.

The best introduction to the Qur’an for those who wish to know how Muslims read and interact with the Qur’an. A delicate balance of highly scholarly material and inviting anecdotes, bringing the Qur’an alive in ways only someone fully engaged with Islam and sensitive to twenty-first century realities can.

180 pgs. A nice introduction to the basic themes of the Qur’an, divided into seven categories: God, Man as Individual, Man as Society, Nature, Prophethood and Revelation, Eschatology, Satan and Evil.

Sells, Michael. Approaching the Quran (White Cloud Press, 1999)
Nice translations with straightforward explanations that make the text more accessible than an independent translation. An excellent way to begin understanding the depth and complexity of the Qur’anic message. Includes a CD to provide an auditive approach.

130 pgs—A straightforward account of the central teachings of the Qur’an by one of the leading Muslim scholars of the 20th century. An excellent opportunity to see how an traditional scholar attempts to think with the Qur’an.

II. Qur’anic Commentary:

The most accessible selection of translations from traditional Qur’anic commentaries. Good for an introduction but requires historical and intellectual contextualization.

An introduction to the genre of classical tafsir and an in depth study of one of its major architects. Through a detailed study of al-Tha’labi’s al-Kashf and the history of its reception, Saleh demonstrates how the tradition of tafsir has developed and narrowed over time.

III. Sirah—Biography of the Prophet:

Lings, Martin. Muhammad: His Life Based on the Earliest Sources (Cambridge, Islamic Texts Society).
Thoroughly researched and grounded in the traditional sources, this is the definitive biography of the Prophet Muhammad in the modern period. Written in beautiful English with great sensitivity and attention to detail. A remarkable achievement.

Still one of the best treatments of the life of the Prophet. Unlike many biographies in the modern period, this usually allows the primary texts to speak for themselves and does not distort the texts through the over-application of modern academic theories.

The continuation of Muhammad at Mecca, written with the same care and sensitivity.

IV. Hadith:

Demonstrating the central role of third/ninth century hadith scholars in the articulation of Sunni Islam, this book bases its findings largely upon the analysis of multiple biographical dictionaries. Part I establishes conceptual and historical frameworks for the study of Sunni hadith scholarship. Part II examines in detail the three foundational principles of Sunni Islam: 1) the collective probity of the sahaba, 2) the discipline of hadith-transmitter criticism, and 3) a historical vision of the authoritative channels by which hadith traversed the two centuries between the life of the Prophet Muhammad and the first major hadith books.

343pgs. Though ostensibly about early Islamic Law, this work presents the clearest outline of the development of skepticism towards the hadith among Western scholars and the inaccuracy of their hypothesis. Employing texts that were previously unavailable, Motzki demonstrates that many sayings of the Prophet Muhammad were in circulation by the end of the first century. This undercuts the theoretical basis for all skeptical approaches toward the development of the hadith and jurisprudence that have dominated academia over the last fifty years. It is a must read for every scholar of early Islam and anyone who wishes to understand the arguments regarding the authenticity of the hadith tradition.

192pgs. A concise introduction to the development of the hadith sciences and some of the basic terminology. A nice introduction, but should be supplemented by other materials.

V. Islamic History:

618 pgs. The most comprehensive history of the Islamic World in the Medieval Period. Deals with dynastic, culture and intellectual developments. Well written and extremely erudite, it is a reference used by all specialists in the field.

476 pgs. Continues the brilliant analysis of Volume 2. The most comprehensive history of the Islamic World in the pre-modern and modern periods. Well written and extremely erudite, it is a reference used by all specialists in the field.

1000 pgs. Perhaps the most comprehensive single volume on Islamic history. Focuses upon the distinctive development of communal, religious and political institutions within the Islamic world. Covers the transformation of pre-Islamic Middle Eastern civilization, the diffusion of Islam to other regions, and the disruption of Muslim societies under European domination.

VI. Islamic Law:

On Legal History:
A good introductory text in Islamic law. Covers most of the basics.

If the Qur'an is the first written formulation of Islam in general, Imam Malik's Muwatta' is arguably the first written formulation of the Islam-in-practice that becomes Islamic law. This book considers the methods used by Malik in the Muwatta' to derive the judgments of the law from the Qur'an and is thus concerned on one level with the finer details of Qur'anic interpretation. However, since any discussion of the Qur'an in this context must also include considerations of the other main source of Islamic law, namely the sunna, or normative practice, of the Prophet, this latter concept, especially its relationship to the terms of had the and 'amal (praxis), also receives considerable attention, and in many respects, this book is more about the history and development of Islamic law than it is about the science of Qur'anic interpretation.

246 pgs. A coherent narrative of the formation of Islamic jurisprudence that provides an overview of the organic development of the schools of Islamic jurisprudence from the Qur'an and sunna. Very good treatment of early period, but lacking in treatment of the later period.

304 pgs. A lucid, nuanced, and sophisticated study based on extensive reading in the sources. Traces the history of Islamic legal theory from its beginnings until the modern period, an essential tool for the understanding of Islamic legal theory in particular and Islamic law in general.

Demonstrates how education developed around mosques in the early Islamic period and then developed into madrasas focused upon Islamic law and the propagation of particular schools. Then examines how the rise of these colleges influenced the rise of the university in the Medieval Christian West. Among the most important studies of the intellectual exchange between Islam and the West.

343 pgs. Though ostensibly about early Islamic Law, this work presents the clearest outline of the development of skepticism towards the hadith among Western scholars and the inaccuracy of their hypothesis. Employing texts that were previously unavailable, Motzki demonstrates that many sayings of the Prophet Muhammad were in circulation by the end of the first century. This undercuts the theoretical basis for all skeptical approaches toward the development of the hadith and jurisprudence that have dominated Western academia over the last fifty years. It is a must read for every scholar of early Islam and anyone who wishes to understand the arguments regarding the authenticity of the hadith tradition.
Stewart, Devin J. Islamic Legal Orthodoxy (University of Utah Press, 1998).
280 pgs. Demonstrates the manner in which Shi’ite fiqh developed in the context of Sunni legal debates. An invaluable contribution to our understanding of the early history of Islamic law.

On Legal Theory:
550 pgs. A good outline of the principles of Islamic jurisprudence and their application is specific fields. Pretty much the standard for Islamic Jurisprudence (Usul al-Fiqh) in the English language. It explains most of the various methodological tools that are used in deriving law, often with examples. Requires concentration, but accessible to the undergraduate with proper guidance.

210 pgs. Helps one understand the richness and complexity of Islamic legal traditions while also examining the underlying spirit of Islamic Law, not just its outward form. Includes examples of immediate dilemmas Muslims face in modern life, thus making it more accessible to the non-specialist.

211 pgs. A detailed yet accessible summary of the basic issues of Islamic Law. Good summary of how legal theories were developed.

Also Recommended:
340 pgs. Offers the only detailed presentation in English of freedom of expression from both the legal and moral perspectives of Islam. Attempts to examine both the evidence on freedom of expression in the sources of the Shari’ah and the limitations, whether moral, legal or theological, that Islam imposes on the valid exercise of this freedom.

VII. Islamic Theology:
Jackson, Sherman. On the Boundaries of Theological Tolerance on Islam (Oxford University, 2002).
156 pgs. The long introduction provides a good outline of some central debates in Islamic theology, particularly the tension between rationalists and traditionalists. But does not provide a full understanding of the comprehensive understanding from direct experience that al-Ghazali sees as the only path to true knowledge.

251 pgs. A good introduction to the early development of Islamic theology with useful translations of primary texts and interesting comparisons to developments in the modern period.

Watt, Montgomery. An Introduction to Islamic Philosophy and Theology (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University). A nice introduction, though somewhat outdated. Focuses more upon theology than philosophy. Provides a general outline of the main issues that divided Muslim thinkers and the schools of theology that arose therefrom.

Wolfson, Harry A. The Philosophy of the Kalam (Cambridge: Harvard University, 1976). Still the best examination of the debates over the nature of the Quran in Islamic theology. But the book does enter in some very esoteric debates and is not a good introduction to Kalam.

VIII. Islamic Philosophy:

The Introduction is perhaps the best summary of the real intentions behind Islamic philosophy, especially in the later period. A must read for anyone who is truly interested in the subject.

A tour de force. The introduction is still the best essay on Islamic philosophy in any European language. Provides an unparalleled exposition of the development of the philosophy of being (wujud), the key philosophical concept in all Islamic philosophy.

Leaman, Oliver. An Introduction to Classical Islamic Philosophy, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002).
253 pgs. Perhaps the best general introduction to Islamic philosophy available, though not without mistakes, especially as regards later Islamic philosophy and some aspects of Ibn Sina’s ontology.

A collection of essays on Islamic philosophy written over the past forty years by one of the leading experts on Islamic philosophy who studied within the classical Islamic philosophical tradition. Though written originally as introductory essays, many of the essays have yet to be surpassed in modern scholarship.

320 pgs. An in depth analysis of the development Avicenna’s treatment of both God and the soul. Demonstrates how Avicenna built upon previous thinkers, yet created an entirely new frame of reference, thus inaugurating a new philosophical tradition. A must read for anyone who wants to understand the early period of Islamic Philosophy.

248 pgs. A remarkable outline of developments in Islamic philosophy by one of the few people to have mastered both the Western and Islamic philosophical traditions. Explains the key concepts of Islamic epistemology and how knowledge by presence has played a crucial role its development over the centuries.

IX. Essential Reference Works:

   The most comprehensive study of Islamic philosophy. Quite uneven. Some essays are excellent, others are poorly researched and incomplete.

X. Sufism:

On Sufi Thought:

   A masterful exposition of the teachings of the School of Ibn al-Arabi. Should be read many times over by the serious student of Islamic thought.

   The most comprehensive examination of Ibn al-Arabi’s teachings available in any European language. The introduction is a beautiful synopsis of Ibn al-Arabi’s worldview.

   A detailed and concise examination of Ibn al-Arabi’s understanding of prophecy and sainthood. Though limited to one specific area, this is perhaps the best book on Ibn al-'Arabi in any European language.

   134 pgs. The most eloquent introduction to Sufism in any European language, but some of the discussions assume knowledge of certain aspects of Sufism.

   An enduring collection of essays that presents many important aspects of Sufism which have yet to be explored in full by modern scholarship.

On Sufi History and Practice:

   A very accessible account of the main teachings of Sufism, the relation of Sufism to other aspects of Islam and the place of Sufism within Islamic civilization.

   256 pgs. An accessible account of the development of early Sufism, with a real taste for its inner meaning. This is the book I will use for course on Sufism.

   A Nice outline of the early historical development of Sufi ideas, but somewhat dry in presentation. Never really gets to the heart of the matter.

A moving account of the life and teachings Shaykh al-Alawi. Shows Sufism in action, not merely in theory.

The classic resource for the development of early Sufism by one of the most influential scholars in the field. The presentation of later Sufism and the school of Ibn al-Arabi is, however, lacking.

333pgs.

XI. Shi‘ism:

An excellent discussion of the full meaning of the imamate as a spiritual, not just a political, reality, with a heavy emphasis on metaphysical and mystical ideas within Shi‘ism. The sheer breadth of the sources employed makes this a truly exceptional work.

An excellent study of the Imamate as it develops over time, especially from the period of Ja‘far al-Sadiq through the disappearance of the Twelfth Imam, and the political and theological issues involved in establishing the doctrine of the ghaybah (Incultation) of the Twelfth Imam. Provides edited and translated texts of theological and polemical debates between the Twelver thinkers trying to establish the soundness of the ghaybah doctrine, and their Zaydi and Sunni detractors.

The best available study of Shi‘ite hadith literature and the way in which it reflects tensions between different centers of Shi‘ite thought in the 3rd and 4th centuries.

A nice overview of fundamental Shi‘ite beliefs from a prominent contemporary Shi‘ite scholar, with good sections on the more interesting dimensions, such as taqiyyah and bada.

Has some good sections for an introduction to Shi‘ite thought and its relationship to other branches of Islam, but should be used in conjunction with other works on Shi‘ism.

XII. Islamic Art and Architecture:

An amazing book with excellent pictures and penetrating insight.

An incredible exposition of the unifying principles underlying all forms of religious art.

Revised and enlarged edition.

A beautiful collection of essays on calligraphy, poetry and architecture in the Islamic world.

XIII. Islam and the West/Islam in the Modern World:

Offers insights that are desperately needed in the current environment.

An excellent study of the relations between Islam and the West for over one thousand years. A must read for any serious student of the subject.

Perhaps S. H. Nasr’s most important book, contains both historical examinations and philosophical essays. An excellent book for contextualizing current misunderstandings between Islam and the West.

XIV. Islamic Fundamentalism:

A concise account of the history and teachings of Wahhabi Islam, arguing that this sect is a complete historical aberration.

320 pgs. Argues that the extremist sects of Islam, mainly Wahhabism, blatantly defy the true values of Islam. Clarifies that Wahhabism was once an unpopular, fringe, cultlike movement, which only grew through a chance partnership with the Saudi Arabian ruling family and the discovery of oil that created an unprecedented infusion of petro-dollars into the fledgling, conservative belief system.

XV. Islam and Other Religions:

Shah-Kazemi, Reza. The Other in the Light of the One: The Universality of the Qur’ân and Interfaith Dialogue (London: Islamic Texts Society, 2006). Examines verses of the Quran that discuss other religions in light of the Sufi principles of Quranic interpretation. An incredible achievement that should change the view of way the Quran presents other religions for both Muslims and non-Muslims.